Synopsis

A young musician battles with his repressed desires due to his deep connection with his family and faith. His music is his only window into the struggles he's facing. Amidst his temptation he seeks solace in his music and the people he cares for around him, further complicating his struggles.

Director's Statement

Prior to shooting, I'd been passionate about telling this religious story for almost a year, with Christian musical ideas popping into my head, urging me to write; Song Boy. Getting the go ahead to create this project was such an amazing moment knowing I could combine these musical ideas with philosophical ideas on faith, that I think a lot of people face in religious and non-religious communities. Having such an amazing crew come on board to make this imaginary idea a reality had been one of the most rewarding experiences of my life, collaborating with, and properly getting to know people for the first time. It's been surreal and am honestly overjoyed to be working with such talented and motivated young people who I hope to continue collaborating with in the future.

“Quidquid luce fuit, tenebris agit” or the other way around - Ethan Price

Producer's Statement

Song Boy became a passion project for me after Ethan pitched the idea of turning his religiously themed songs into a short film. Being able to turn Ethan's musical talent into a script was an absolute joy to be a part of - For not just myself, but everyone that had the opportunity to work on it. It's not everyday that you have the opportunity to create a musical/drama - Especially not one that has as many songs that could stand alone as hits in their own right.

The crew worked tirelessly to see this film come to fruition and should be commemorated for always being positive and helping achieve the vision we set out to create.

Jonah

Played By Harrison Martin

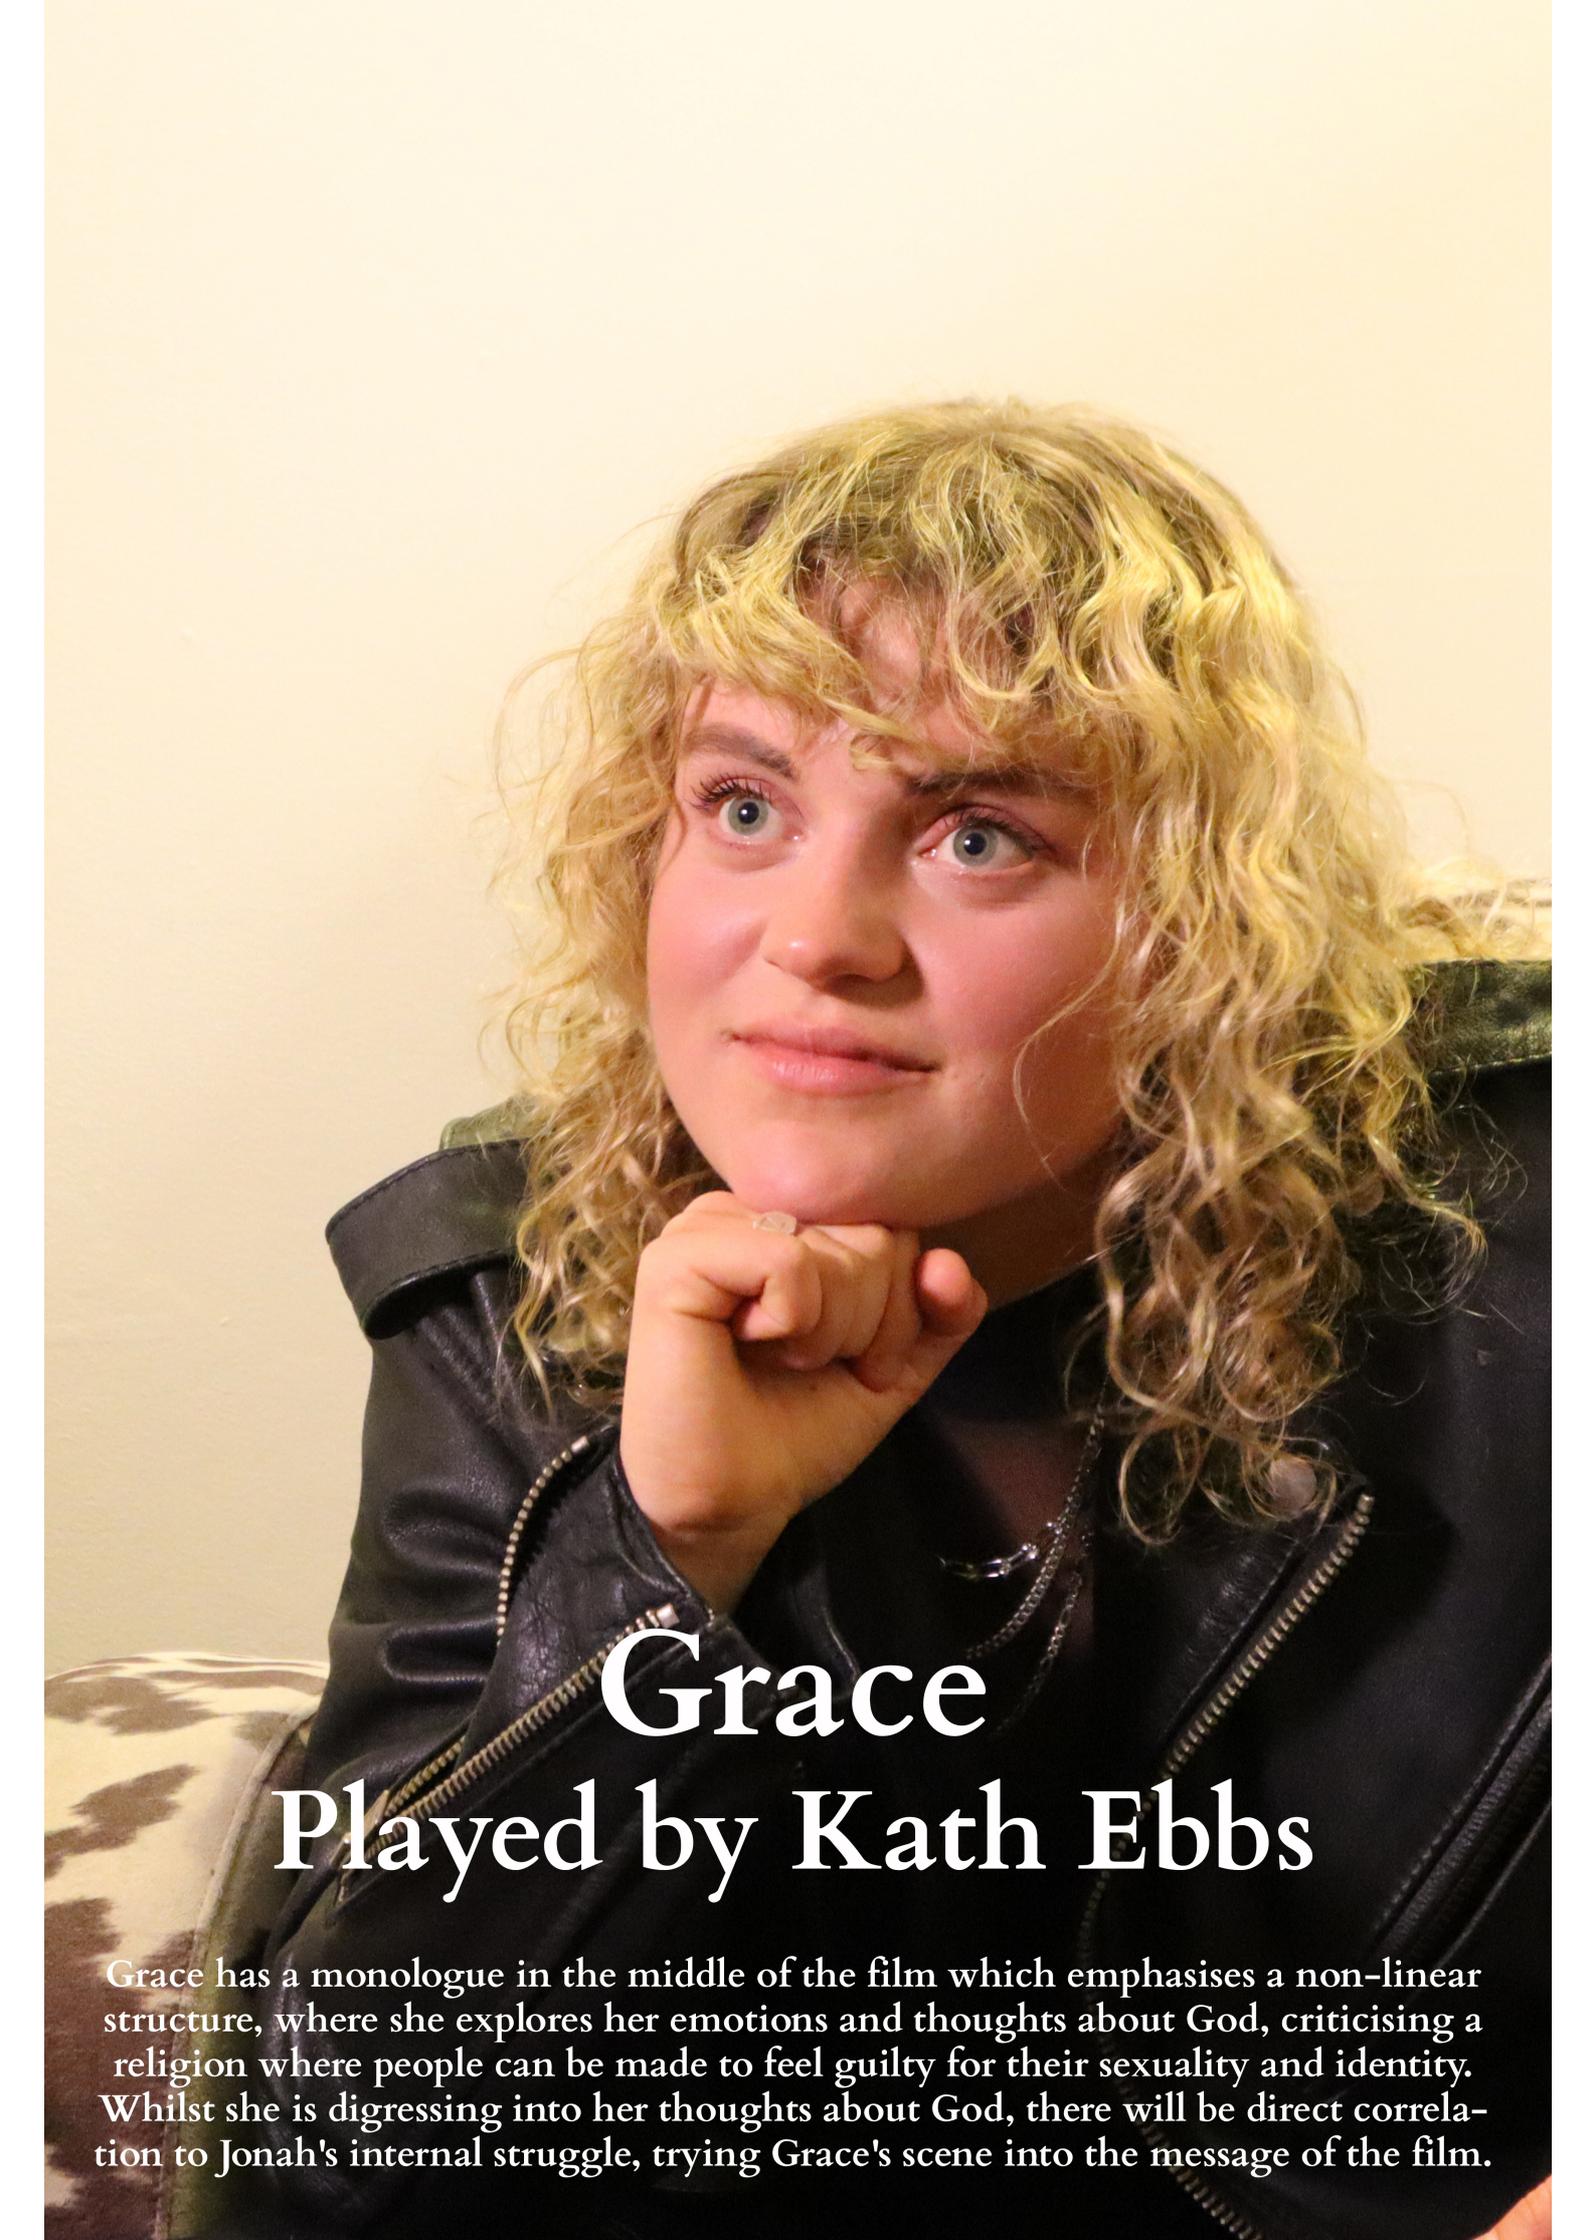

Jonah is a young man with an avid passion for music, writing songs since he was a young boy. He comes from a Christian family, living alone with his mother, Mary. Struggling with his connection to God, he internally toils with his faith when his emotions seem to him more powerful.

Mary

Played By Sophie Adams

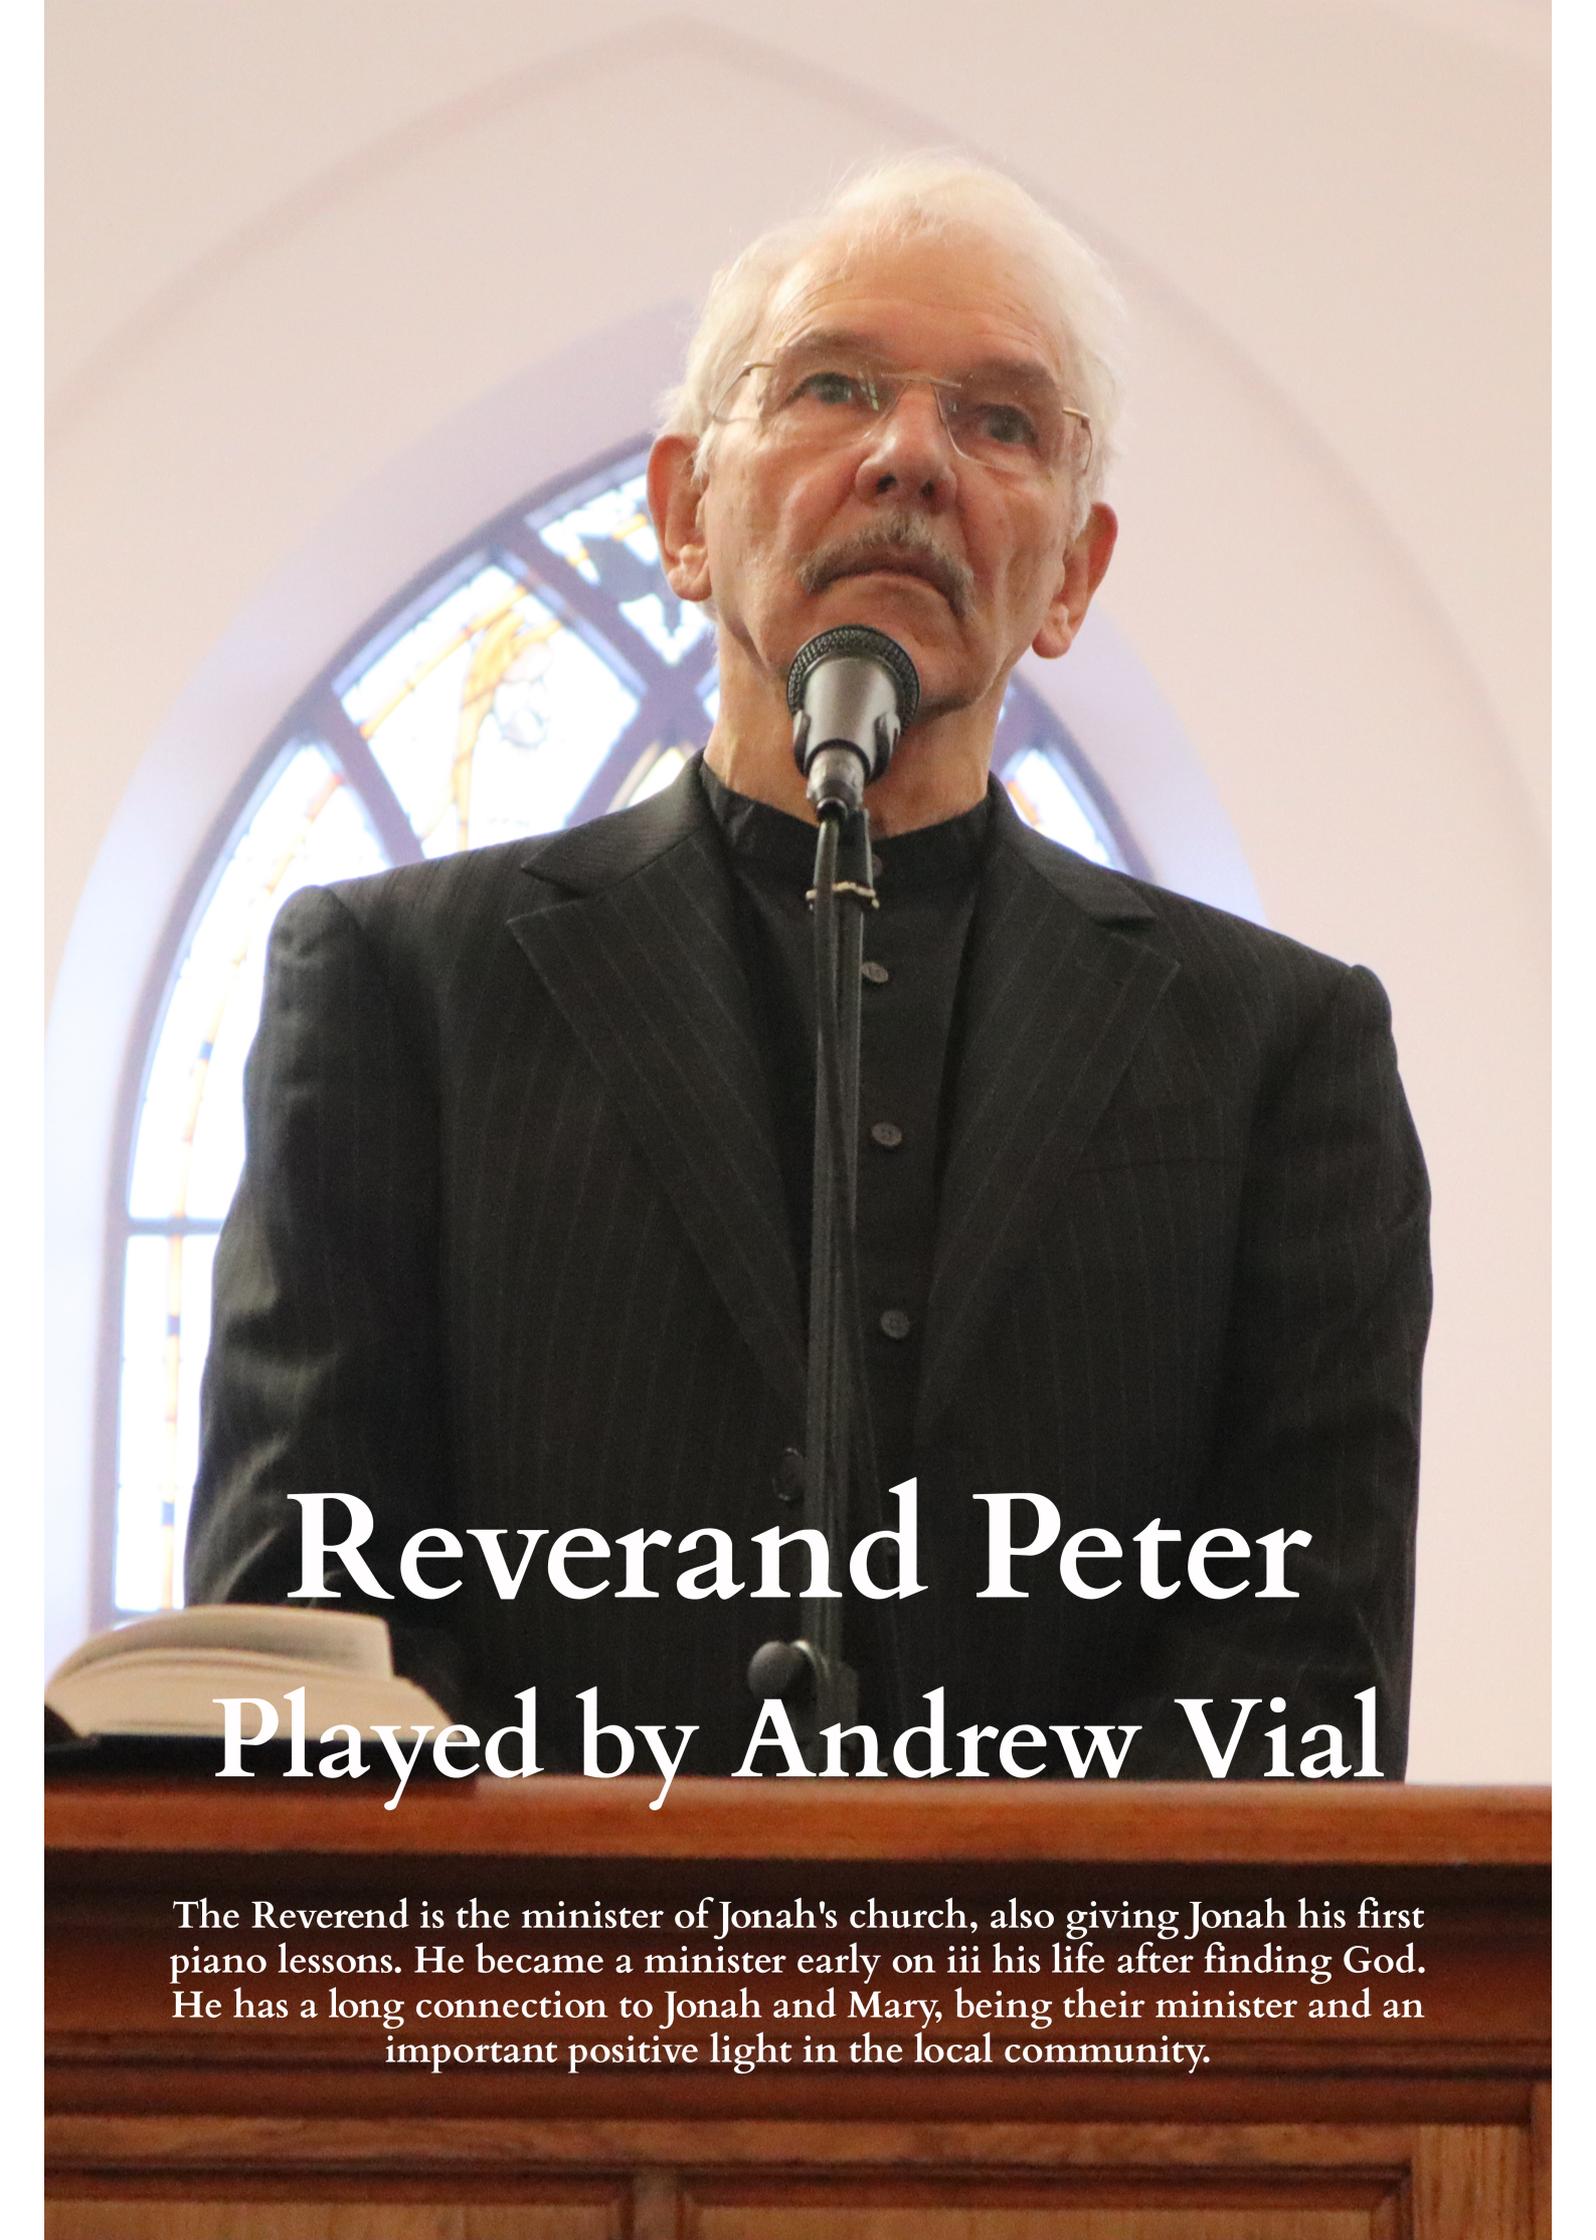

Mary, Jonah's mother is a pivotal member of the local church community, there for every Sunday sermon whilst always volunteering to help others. She is committed not only to the church but also massively her son, after tragic passing of her husband, Jonah's father.

Grace

Played by Kath Ebbs

Grace has a monologue in the middle of the film which emphasises a non-linear structure, where she explores her emotions and thoughts about God, criticising a religion where people can be made to feel guilty for their sexuality and identity. Whilst she is digressing into her thoughts about God, there will be direct correlation to Jonah's internal struggle, trying Grace's scene into the message of the film.

Reverend Peter

Played by Andrew Vial

The Reverend is the minister of Jonah's church, also giving Jonah his first piano lessons. He became a minister early on in his life after finding God. He has a long connection to Jonah and Mary, being their minister and an important positive light in the local community.

Rachael
Played By
Annabelle McConnachie

Rachael is a regular at Jonah's church, playing bass in the Church band. She is innocent and untainted by temptation though, after one morning sermon diverts Jonah's eyes in a holy, romantic moment. More is in store for her in the spiritual and musical world.

St. Johns Anglican Church Maroubra and The Ebbs Family

A close-up, low-angle shot of a wooden organ console in a church. The console features a keyboard with black and white keys, and a control panel with various knobs and buttons. On top of the console, there is a stack of sheet music, a green folder, and a white cup. In the background, wooden pews and a person are visible, suggesting a church setting.
